DISCOVER INTI RAYMI

The Festival of the Sun (Inti Raymi) is one of the largest and most important celebrations in the times of the Incan Empire, celebrating the Sun God Inti and marking the winter solstice and Incan New Year. Dating back to the fifteenth century, the nine-day celebration takes place in the city of Cusco and was filled with colorful dances, processions, and animal sacrifices to thank Earth Goddess Pachamama for her bounty and ensure a good harvest season. Today's celebrations involve more than 800 actors, dancers, and musicians in historic costumes who perform a series of scenes, dances, performances, and other events. Experience the Festival of the Sun in all its beauty and authenticity.

FESTIVAL HIGHLIGHTS

SACRED READING OF THE COCA LEAVES

Markets are an important staple of the Day of the Dead festivities, offering locals all the supplies they will need for their celebrations. Chaotic in the absolute best way, you'll be able to browse hundreds of vendor stalls for flowers, food, and crafts to commemorate your time in Oaxaca.

CELEBRATORY MASKS

Participants in the ancient rituals would often wear masks as part of ceremonies and sacrificial rituals. The brightly colored, double-sided Aya Huma mask played an important role in Festival of the Sun proceedings. Masks of all types can be seen during the festival, often representing animals and deities important to the Incan culture.

REENACTMENT AT SACSAYHUAMÁN

The final portion of the festival is the re-enactment performed in Sacsayhuaman, the ancient archeological site where it's believed the festival took place in ancient times. The event's Sun King delivers a speech in praise of the sun before being carried by pallbearers in a golden chariot to the temple. The Sun King delivers his final prayer in the traditional Quechua language before the faux sacrifice of a llama, ensuring the next harvest will be bountiful.

BEHIND THE SCENES OF INTI RAYMI

The day before the celebration begins, we will go behind the scenes of Inti Raymi where we will meet with some of the actors involved in the festival to learn firsthand how this is put together and its significance in the community. Additionally, we'll have a chance to see some of the costumes giving us an exclusive sneak peak into some of the colorful performances that will happen in the city. A truly once-in-a-lifetime experience only with Discover Corps!
